

There are leaders — and then there are leaders who graduated from PC. The difference is clear: our students don't just learn key management skills. Our students have great leadership potential because they develop self-awareness, understanding of others, a bias for action, and “response-ability,” the ability to choose their responses, rather than simply react. That's why our graduates are sought after for their ability to positively impact today's rapidly changing business world.

B.S. Management

The management curriculum is closely aligned with the liberal arts objectives of Providence College. Business leaders are increasingly looking for college graduates with a background in core management courses and also with a background in the liberal arts. These courses allow our students to fit into a business environment that is more global and diverse than ever before. Leading and motivating people, solving business problems, and working within an environment of innovation and change are challenges for which our management majors are preparing. With that in mind, the management curriculum develops competence in these five key areas: management knowledge, oral and written communication, leadership, teamwork, and qualitative and quantitative reasoning.

PEOPLE AND PLACES

The Providence College School of Business is one of just 30% of U.S. business schools accredited by AACSB International. It's also listed by Poets and Quants as being among the top undergraduate business schools in the nation.

Management courses are taught in the state-of-the-art, award-winning Arthur F. and Patricia Ryan Center for Business Studies, which includes specialized business computer labs, as well as collaboration, conference, and breakout rooms, and a professional development suite.

Our faculty includes experts in social enterprise and values-based leadership, and some are national authorities on management-related issues. They have published books on selected topics in the field, and their work has appeared in such publications as the Journal of Management, Journal of Business Ethics, Gender in Management, New England Journal of Entrepreneurship, and Journal of Organizational Change Management.
